"If Any Man Will Do His Will." These are days of intense intellectual activity. To be accepted a proposition must be backed by incontestable scientific proof. Because of this many earnest souls seem to find themselves hindered in that spiritual growth and fellowsnip for which they long and strive. It is well to remember that logic cannot decide everything; that the truths to be gained by faith are still the transforming truths; and that only those who live in the spirit can talk of proving or disproving the things of the spirit. A favorite subject of Kipling's was the possibilities of what might happen to a man in a London fog. The idea also struck Robert Barr forcibly, and when I was lunching with him one day he got so carried away by it as to plan a story in which a highly respectable man who hated another highly respectable man was to walk up behind No. 1 in the fog and percolate him with a bowie knite. Then the ghost of the murdered man was to dog the other in the fog and make him 'unkind to hisself.' I don't know whether the story was ever written. Barr probably forgot all about it.

Right to a mechanic's lien for the improvement of grounds by enrichment of the soil, planting flowers, shrubs, steers, price 71/4c; cows, 7c; mutton 8c; trees, etc., without making any structure thereon, except a rustic bridge of alight importance, is denied in Nanz vs. Cumberland Gap Park Company (Tenn.), 47 L. R. A. 273, where the statutes clearly contemplate such liens shall be created only by the erection of some building.

Authority to set apart a portion of a public highway for a bleycle path is held, in State vs. Bradford (Minn.), 47 L. R. A. 144, to be granted by implication when a statute makes it unlawful to drive animals on such bleycle path, but it is held that this act must be restricted to bicycle paths which are public, and that it would be invalid as to those constructed on private grounds for private use.

Judgment against a solvent garnishee which the plaintiff fails to collect, without any excuse, is held, in Bowen vs. Port Huron E. and T. Co. (Iowa), 47 L. R. A. 131, to constitute a satisfaction of the claim against the original debtor for the amount of such judgment. With this case there is a note collating the other authorities on the effect of a judgment against a garnishee to merge or satisfy the liability of the principal debtor.

Ejection of a trespasser from footboard of a locomotive, though his presence there does not interfere with the manipulation of the machinery by the engineer, whose position is inside the cab, is held, in Galveston H. & S.
